It makes it awkward, a bit superstitious, and maybe even a little queasy. So we avoid the topic left and right and postpone making the will once again. But here you are, reading about the will (even if it gives you an amazing feeling at the bottom of your stomach). You've come so far and we're proud of you. So take a deep breath—we'll soon answer everything you wanted to know (but were afraid to ask) about your will. 1. What is the will? Simply put, will is a legally binding document that explains exactly how you want your property and other things to be handled after your death. We know it's not convenient talking about these kinds of things. But as horrible as you can feel, what you prefer is one of the most important things you can do for yourself and your family. 2. What is the difference between living trust and will? Living trust and will may seem similar in the way they work, but they are different. Will tells everyone how you want the things you own to be handled after death. Living trust keeps your assets alive while you're still alive. Not sure how to talk about your end-of-life wishes? Take advantage of this free guide. Living trust never becomes a public document, as it is done after death. So if you want to keep everything private, a living trust protects that information, even after you're not there. It can also help you skip probate costs (this is a lawsuit that deals with giving away everything at will). Any property given by will must go through the inheritance, but not if it is given by the trust! Remember, however, that a living trust cannot name the guardian of your children (in other words, someone who will take care of them if you die) —only the will can do so. 3. Why do I need will? You might think you don't need a will because you're not a millionaire, you're not sitting on a massive piece of land, or you don't have family members who are slings and want to claw their way into your mansion. But guess what? You need will, no matter who you are. If you have children who do not 18 years old, you really need the will. Your will is where you will have all the information about who their carers will be. If you do not take the will of who childcare if something happens to you and your spouse? Do not leave such a decision in the hands of anyone else, but you (especially not the state!). And what about the one-of-a-kind watch your great-grandfather gave you? You want to make sure that something like this stays in your family. Having a will in place allows you to tell exactly who gets what. If you don't take care of it now, someone else will be able to decide where your children, pets and family heirloths will end up. 4. What if I haven't had children yet? So you think that since you don't have children yet, isn't it important to make misses? False. That's what we said, but it's worth repeating: Everyone needs will! Even if it's just you and your dog living in a one-bedroom apartment. Who would take a Rover if something happened to you? And if you have children later down the road or niece you love, you can update your will to include them. Make these 7 decisions before you create your will and remove the headache from the process. 5. Do I need to create a new will if I move between countries? Not. Most states across America will honor the will that was signed in another state. But if you plan to move, it's wise to double check the laws in the new state and update your will if necessary. 6. Do I need to get a note? You always need two witnesses to make a will valid, but you don't always need it to be notified (check your country's laws). Obtaining a certified note simply means that the public official (called a notary) will make sure that the person signing the document is who he or she speaks to. Some states want a document (called a self-induffable statement) from witnesses stating that they have seen you sign a will or have seen someone sign it for you at your request. This document also proves that you were in your right mind and signed everything voluntarily. Having this in place saves a lot of time in the inheritance (remember that this is just a lawsuit that deals with giving away everything at will). A small note about your witnesses, though make sure you're not leaving anything to them in your will (because you won't get whatever it is!). The witness cannot receive anything of the will he or she is witnessing. So skip asking your daughter (who gets your house at will) to be a witness and instead ask a trusted co-worker or family friend. 7. Can I change or cancel my will? Absolutely! This thing is not embedded in stone. Nothing is permanent until you leave. You can add or remove items at any time. When you do this, you sign a new card that says the old card is no longer valid. After signing a new will, you should safely get rid of the old will (shred sucker). And if you've given copies to anyone else, make sure you're the one who shreds them too. In this way, there will be no confusion over which there is a Will. And if you want to cancel your will, you can. All this means that you destroy your old will (you know, you shred it) and create a new one. 8. When should I my will? You need to update your will at any time your wishes change or after some event of life (like getting married, bringing home a brand new child, etc.). I may need to update your will after any kind of unpleasant life change too (as in the case of a family member's death or divorce). When life changes, your will must change too. 9. Who should hand over copies? After signing the will, keep a copy for yourself (duh) and give it to the person you mentioned as your personal representative (someone you trust who will make sure your wishes are made after death). If you decide not to give them a physical copy of the will, at least let them know where to keep their will so they can get into it if they need to. If you ever update your will, be sure to get rid of the copies that others have and do it yourself! If you trust them with your will, you probably trust them very much. Still, it's a good idea to move forward and destroy the old document yourself. 10. What happens to my things if I have no will? Whether you know it or not, you already have a bite . . . Kind of. Even if you've never signed a will, there are laws in the state that support how to sort by property if you don't have the will. This kind of thing is called non-testacy law. And that's basically a fancy way of saying that the state will do things to you if you don't have the will. But then your family is in a mess. They'll go to the probate court for a while and that's a real headache! When you die without will, the probate court will decide things like which of your family members will get their property, things and even children who are under 18 (yikes!). Don't let that happen. Creating a will is one of the most important and loving things you can do for your family. Believe it or not, it's easy to do your own will online in less than 20 minutes! All you have to do is connect important information, and the rest is done for you. And best of all, this process won't bog you out with a lot of nonsense legal jargon. Take this step today! Today!
